software company Biggastamp. As you can see, the first layer of inspection was negative, but the file name is definitely suspicious, so we decided to further investigate. The second layer of inspection was positive and indicated that the file was indeed executable. The third layer of inspection is after the manual execution. Note: Starting to look like a legitimate video editor. Upon doing some further digging, we found out that the software was pirated. To test if the software is indeed legitimate, we put it to the test of a binary analysis. The analysis revealed that the DLL is a legitimate Windows component. The next step in our investigation was to examine the files hidden inside the EXE. A closer look at the EXE reveals that it is a legitimate Windows executable. Because we did not have the password for the software, we
