In a world of competition and instant gratification, we have to fight against a culture that pushes for efficiency to the point of overwhelming us all. While this is usually a good thing, it doesn't help us survive in our current, fast-paced business climate. The universe is sending us signs in abundance to slow things down. We need to be extra-alert in our daily lives so that we are attuned to the subtle signals we need to get from it. I'm not talking about discarding the latest development from Apple. I am talking about going into 'detached awareness' in the moment so that we are sensitive to signs of life from our loved ones, our environment, and ourselves. When we have these quickening inputs, we need to be discerning and not get caught up in the raging emotions, noise, and distractions of the moment. It is this type of discernment that will help us to survive and thrive in this age of instant communication. Keeping it Simple We don't have to be
