Epidemiology, anthropology, and forensic anthropology all are potential sources of cut-offs. They can be life-saving tools in the forensic field; however, in the case of anthropological and epidemiological cut-offs, the only method available to obtain the correct location of the actual life-threatening injury is that of accidental near-miss or intentional assault. Near misses often result in slabs of bone. Possible cut-off fractures may be detected, but the source of the fracture must be determined to properly identify the injury. If the cut-off fracture occurs in an area of minimal trauma, it is possible to attribute the cut-off to a significant external trauma. If the fracture occurs in an area with more than minimal trauma, then the source of the fracture may be suspected to be from a non-external injury. Other potential sources of cut-offs, such as animal attack, trench warfare, hyperbaric oxygen chambers, or other conditions, have been discussed and reviewed. This report reviews the cause of major sources of cut-offs that are not accidents in terms of accidental near misses or intentional assaults. Data from the literature were combined with personal observations from recent field investigations. Causes of cut-offs include animal attacks, falls from heights, grenade attacks, combat trench warfare, hyperbaric oxygen chambers, and industrial accidents. part should be fined," the Palestinian Minister of Education says and calls for the cancellation of ties between Arab countries and Israel. "This is unprecedented and points to the deterioration in the Palestinian-Arab political system," he says and urges Palestinian Authority Chairman Mahmoud Abbas to fulfill his obligations to the United States. Al-Hassan Shaheen writes in the Jordanian daily Al-Quds that the decision to cancel ties with Israel is due to the Israeli occupation of Palestinian territories, "which is part of the base of Arab-Israeli relations and the reason for the lack of understanding between Arab states and Israel." He states that the Arab decision also follows the decision of the Palestinian "executive to sever ties with Washington," which he considers as a mistake. "But this is not what happened to the Palestinian relations with any Arab country," he says and calls for establishing a Palestinian council for recognition of Israel.
